Allsup Disability Finance Poll

A Snapshot of Financial Resources and Assistance Used by People with Disabilities

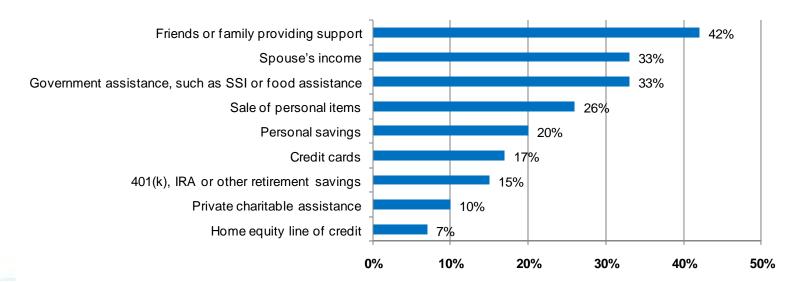

June 2010

Financial Resources While Awaiting SSDI Benefits

- People most often rely on friends and family as well as their spouse's income for financial support while awaiting SSDI benefits.
- Many also rely on personal savings, often until it is depleted. They may then turn to credit cards, which can result in high-interest rate and long-term debt, and retirement savings, which can result in taxes and penalties.

What resources are you relying on to meet your financial needs while you await your SSDI award? Check all that apply.

Home Equity and SSDI Benefits

- A majority of respondents experienced problems with their line of credit.
- People take a risk when they use home equity lines of credit for basic financial needs, particularly if the value of their home has declined, since they may overextend themselves.

Which one of the following best describes your access to a line of credit, such as a home equity loan, over the past year?

Seeking Program Assistance

- People consider or seek assistance from a variety of programs at the local, state and federal level. However, they typically experience limited success, as indicated below.
- Food stamps were most commonly sought (52 percent), followed by prescription drug assistance (44 percent).

Have you considered or attempted to get assistance through the following programs in your local community or state? Check all that apply.
